The preparations for the 2013 data collection are in full swing!

Here is something new: you will be able to fill out the questionnaire online! A link to the secure online questionnaire will be e-mailed to you personally. As a result, we need you to provide us with your e-mail address.

WARNING: it is very important that YOU provide it to us to make sure that we have your consent. The reply card attached to this issue of The investigator will help you provide us with your e-mail address as well as that of your parent participating in the study. We are counting on you! If you do not have an e-mail address, you do not need to create one; we will find another easy way to contact you. Whatever the case, we still need your reply card.

Did you know that...

> To celebrate your 15th birthday and the 15 years of the "I am, I'll be" study, we have chosen to change our look?

> The inspiration for the new logo came from the speech bubble, or phylactery, which is used to express what comic strip characters say or think?

> Speech bubbles were used in medieval times to make the characters represented in Christian art "talk"?

> In ancient Egypt, a phylactery was a type of amulet made out of a piece of parchment containing magical elements to attract the favour of the Gods?

The speech bubbles used in comic strips are often round or rectangular but you will notice that this one is not like the others... it is open to indicate that we want you to express yourself through yours answers in the questionnaire!

Win a Netbook survey and draw

In the last issue of The investigator, we invited you to participate in our survey to win one of the 20 netbooks used during the 2011 round of data collection. Well, more than 1,000 young people shared their opinion with us! Many suggestions were made and we are already looking into what is feasible. Write us at Iam_Illbe@stat.gouv.qc.ca if you have other ideas, we want to know about them!

Thank you to all the people who participated in the survey and congratulations to the winners!
