A word from the coordinator

The I am, I'll be team is very grateful for the time you have devoted to the study, both this year and previous years, and for your important contribution to the advancement of knowledge. All the information you have sent us will be kept strictly confidential. The data collected for more than twenty years is analyzed by Statistique Québec, by departments and agencies and by dozens of researchers. In this newsletter, we present an overview of the wonderful discoveries that have been made thanks to the information that you and your family have been providing for 20 years.

Thank you again and a beautiful autumn to all!

Nancy

Coordinator of the I am, I'll be study

➡ Upcoming publications

The I am, I'll be team is preparing new work that will be published in December 2019 and added to the publications that are already available on the study's website.

High school graduation

This publication examines the individual, family, and school factors associated with obtaining (or not) a high school diploma 7 years after starting high school.

Life satisfaction during the transition to adulthood

This publication describes levels of life satisfaction at age 19 and identifies key individual, family and social characteristics, and family situations perceived as stressful and their link with life satisfaction.

New fact sheets for stakeholders

Each sheet provides a summary of the results presented in Statistique Québec's publications, as well as suggested intervention paths. These sheets cover the following topics:

- o the adaptation of young people during their transition to high school;
- o the characteristics of young people who are more vulnerable to dropping out in the first year of high school;
- o the link between reading for pleasure and grades in the language of instruction at age 15.
